SATURDAY MORNING, APRIL 10, 1858.

No better illustration of the advantages to be derived from attention to the exterior decorations of a house, than the improvements recently made in the bank of Rhode Island building, can be given. Before the fire, it was a plain, unattractive front, but not more so than hundreds of others. There was nothing to throw a shade, and, therefore, nothing like relief to a wide, high, square building. But a fire opposite gives it such a coloring that it becomes necessary to remodel the whole front, and, fortunately, it has been done in a manner that gives very general satisfaction. Now, by changing the whole form of the window frames and trimmings, there is an agreeable play of light and shade, and at once the exterior is raised from mediocrity to a position that commands respect—and this, too, at a cost but little, probably, above the expense attending such a front as the old one. Improvements like these should be noticed, and we should do our utmost to encourage every one who thinks of building or altering an old building to give due weight to an important matter. Something more is required than a comfortable and convenient arrangement of the interior to suit the improving tastes of the age, and the houses that give evidence in the most thoughtful on this subject will be the ones most likely to attract attention and secure a purchaser, when thrown into the market. At the head of Broad street at the present time are two little cottages, now in course of erection by Mr. David Cox, both on the same general plan, and very attractive in their external finish. They catch the eye at once, and we venture to say that the difference in the rest, when leased, will fully repay the extra cost of a becoming finish. Many have yet to learn the importance of this, and others are only in the idea, but it is the one way to build, and in time we hope that all will have a better notion of what is wanted, and that the utilization principle, which has governed so long, will give way to something more in keeping with the refined and cultivated taste with which we sepa. There is nothing so humble but we may give it the amount of thought necessary to raise it into something like importance. A log cabin can be made more attractive than one that could suppose it to be possible with material's only. On this subject Mr. Vaux, a man of refined and cultivated taste, thus expresses himself: "A very unusual visiting any part of the country, that most of the villas and cottages are erected without regard to artistic propriety, and at a considerable loss to their owners from the needless outlay incurred by adopting a huddled plan, and the subject as well as the safety of the house, would be improved by a little more variety. Square boxes, small and large, are springing up in every direction, constructed without any attempt at proportion, or the slightest apparent desire to make their agreeable objects in the landscape. These tell their tale simply and sorrowfully; they are the natural result of the migration, independent spirit, pervading the education classes of America, and other interesting evidences of the general prosperity of the country, for they show not only that the local and general system is healthy, but that almost every stockade and merchandise can flourish, even when quite young to lay its own leaf and live in its own house. On the other hand, however, they demonstrate that the expense for enjoyment and the appreciation of what is truly desirable in life, that should naturally accompany this activity and industry, as we wanted—so far as it could suppose it to be possible with material's only. The Americans have there, and a few appropriate marks by Acting Commissaries Mix. The interpreter thus placed on the coffin the box containing the personal decorations of the deceased, with his club and tomahawk, and covered the whole with his muffle. The grave was then filled and the large concourse of spectators dispersed.

Accounts from Sydney, Australia's Empire, up to January 12, give the particulars of a horrible massacre at the hands of the Rev. John G. Scott, of the Native Street Presbyterian Church, the coffin was placed in a shroud, and a long procession was formed, including twenty-six carriages. The Acting Commissary of Indian Affairs, several clerks of the Indian Bureau, the agents and interpreters, and the Indian now here followed the casket to the street in procession, in the Congressional Burying Ground.

After the casket had been deposited in the grave, the Rev. Mr. Scott offered an impressive prayer, which was followed by a silent eulogy from "Lloyd" of the Powers new paper, and a few appropriate marks by Acting Commissaries Mix. The interpreter thus placed on the coffin the box containing the personal decorations of the deceased, with his club and tomahawk, and covered the whole with his muffle. The grave was then filled and the large concourse of spectators dispersed.

Lawrence is suffering from the stagnation of business and want of employment. Hundreds, if not thousands, are leaving for California and the West, and there are other hundreds who are too poor to emigrate elsewhere. In Lynn the business is reviving, but it is said there are too many persons engaged in the shoe business and that the business is rapidly declining.

From Boston, we learn through the Journal, that business is reviving and the prospects are good for as much trade as ought to be done. The paper is now associated with a few persons, and now, if ever, is the time to make one's business known through the medium. No man engaged in business can afford to do without advertising, and those who understand this and are judicious in the management of a powerful aid, are soon wholly without.

SURVIVORS OF BILLY BOWLES.—The Madison (Ia.) Messenger has reliable information that Billy Bowles* has surrendered his sword, and is now at Tampa with his whole party, waiting the consummation of his plan. He is being made to be received into the fold of the rebels. It is to be greatly wondered, when he has his hands he goes his rounds, such as it is, but it is usually small, whereas, if he could only be satisfied to wait two or three years for his return, he would get at the expense of that time a wind of fruit that gives him back his principal, a handsome consideration for his labor, and the interest on his money.

The Calcutta correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, gives an interesting account of the elephants recently landed at that port the government use, and in the course of it relates the following:

"The most intelligent animals. A specie was sold me of a number of elephants in one of the Mosul districts. One of them had committed a fault in refusing to carry a slight additional burden, when met by the master that he would get an extra going fee. He was tried by court martial in the presence of two of his officers, and two of his brothers, and condemned, and on the charge of his conduct, was struck from his service, all raised their trunks in acknowledgment of his justice! Another was appointed to drag the load, which he did by giving his tail with a long chain around his trunk, and the master received the whole weekly, well knowing he deserved it!—They are very considerate as to weighing their load with their trunks when on a march, and if there is an uneven load, they will shift it to the side of the weaker animal. When traveling, they drink a gallon of beer a day, just as sailors and soldiers have their glasses. These animals were at Singapore, returning after the voyage, and were soon to be sent up country to do service in England's cause."

The remains of a Mammoth have been found by the workmen engaged in excavating for the Brooklyn Water Works, and from all accounts, it appears to have been a Mammoth indeed, for one of the teeth measured seventeen and a half inches across, and although partially decayed at the roots, it weighed three and three-quarters pounds. Flores of all-bones, nine inches round, were found, and of these some several weight more were brought to light.

The steamer New Haven has taken the place of the Ferry, which has been lost on account of a thorough overhauling and painting.

The yellow fever in the diamonds reported as

One of the most unfortunate things connected with a revival of interest in religion, is the fact that the press takes it up and trumpet it about, making the most of it as much capital in the way of exciting matter; and the worst feature is the giving of prominent places to men whose previous career was vile and despotic—thus elevating them at once and putting them forward at the very time when they should humble themselves in the dust, and seek in retirement for strength to live and set in a quiet, unobtrusive manner, as become the disciples of Christ. The ploy may be that an example is wanted, but if that is the case, we think very bad taste and very little judgment has been shown in some of the selections for the purpose, and that the course pursued is a positive injury to the cause of religion. Take a case like that of "Awful" Gardner, as he has been and is still called—a man who, for years has been notorious in his labors and toils, as his engrossing piloting a man load of street bawds, and police fighting, suddenly brought in a series of his sinfulness, which he confesses openly and is received at once into full communion with men who introduce him to the public and coax him to tell his story to an admiring crowd, with the vague suggestion that somebody is to be benefited by a review of his past life, and that the exhortations of one who lived at variance with men for so long a period is the most suitable one to go about preaching the word of truth. Such a scene in our mind is most repulsive. We do not for a moment question the genuineness of "Awful's" conversion, for it is very probable that he is sincere, but to our mind, he has had very injurious spiritual advisors. Had he at once confessed himself a sinner, and humbly withdrawn from the world to pray that his conversion might be lasting and sincere, he would have accomplished quite as much for himself, we think, and in much better form, for others than can be by presuming to teach those whose lives have been at least as wretched as his own. He has lived on excitement, and he has only changed the atmosphere, and he has yet to test the depth of his sorrow for past sin, by years of conformity to the Word of God. Men may confess their mistakes and short coming in public and do much good, and we do not wish to throw any reflections on the character of any man who has been impelled by his own feelings to take this step, to the contrary, we wish the number brought to confess their sinfulness and need of divine grace was infinitely larger than it is, but at the same time we cannot refrain from expressing our disapprobation of a course which tends to push young converts forward, at the very time when they should feel the need of counsel without permitting them to be placed in a position where they are expected to become teachers and leaders.

One of the Powells, now at Washington, died in that city, and was buried there, according to his last moments that he will not leave his family to be buried in a strange land. The corse was neatly dressed in a crimson black suit, and laid on a new blanket in a handsome coffin, in which were strewed datural & flowers from the public green-room. After a few remarks at the bier by the Rev. John G. Scott, of the Native Street Presbyterian Church, the coffin was placed in a shroud, and a long procession was formed, including twenty-six carriages. The Acting Commissary of Indian Affairs, several clerks of the Indian Bureau, the agents and interpreters, and the Indian now here followed the casket to the street in procession, in the Congressional Burying Ground.

We presume, may be called transacting the responsibility.

A second trial for the election of Senator is fixed for Friday next, and persons can register their names up to the Wednesday evening practice.

SENATE.—With the State election secured, and the American Republicans seem to have had their own way. In this city the day passed off quietly, and but little interest was manifested. The result of the vote for members of the General Assembly was declared by the Mayor and Aldermen as follows:
